Dear Home Secretary,

We are writing to you as Women's Aid Federation, comprising of over 180 organisations service women and children affected by male violence, to set out our horror at the attack that took place in Southport on Monday 29th July. This has tragically resulted in the murder of three young girls - Elsie Dot Stancombe, Bebe King, and Alice Dasilva Aguiar. Our whole-hearted thoughts are with their families and those that knew them.

This incident is a horrific tragedy - it is disappointing that it is being viewed in isolation and not through a lens of violence against women and girls (VAWG). As with other incidents we have seen in recent years - whether it be the murders of Nicole Smallman, Bibaa Henry, Sarah Everard, Ellie Gould, or Alice Ruggles - the violence has always been a male problem.

This is further shown to be true through the misogynistic and violent messages we have received when our organisations have spoken out about this.

Less than a week ago, the National Police Chiefs Council's (NPCC's) report declared VAWG a national emergency. Our sector has long been raising the alarm bells about this national threat that has not been sufficiently prioritised, addressed through the right, meaningful action or accountability, or received the investment needed to address and end it.

Furthermore, while the findings of the NPCC into the scale of violence against women and girls in this country are alarming, it is important to remember that many survivors will not report their experiences to the police. The issue will, we know, be much larger than the data shows.

We are also horrified by the violence of far-right groups and their supporters that took place on Tuesday 30th July. These 'protests' and attacks on a Southport mosque are islamophobic, xenophobic and racist. We are concerned that further 'protests' are planned in Southport, but also wider towns and cities. This is terrifying for us as women, but also the women and children we provide support to.

Whilst we have welcomed the Government's mission to halve VAWG in a decade, we have waited too long for urgent action. This cannot wait any longer.

Patrons: Dame Julie Walters and Melanie Brown

Women's Aid is the national federation for local domestic abuse services supporting women and children across England.

We call on the Government to step up its cross-government action on its VAWG mission through engagement with us and our sector, long-term investment in our services and prevention, and develop and deliver a new Ending VAWG strategy.

We hope you will meet with Women's Aid Federation urgently to discuss these issues, and look forward to hearing from you on your Government's plan of action.

Yours sincerely,
